History pruning and privacy on cerberos layer.
Can cerberos prune history? Given enough time, without history pruning, even if the entire solar system is converted into storage devices, there won't be enough storage space to contain all the past transaction data. Give it a thousand years, and converting all the organic and inorganic materials on earth into storage devices probably won't be enough if there are actually millions of new transactions per second, stored on all hard disks on earth. Unless people develop infinite storage systems that have constant access time, history pruning is necessary. At least, mimblewimble can prune spent transaction outputs. Also, history pruning has some privacy benefits in the long term. If scalability was an elephant in the room, history pruning is another elephant in the room that people have been brainwashed or mind-controlled to ignore.
